My dear Friend,

It was a very pleasant surprise to hear from you, and to receive your very kind and sympathetic letter. We were both so disappointed that we missed the visit of yourself and your dear wife in London. I would so much have liked to have a good chat with you about many matters which interest us mutually, so much has taken place since we last met.

As you may have heard, I had a heart attack in August, the result of doing too much for many years, and since the middle of September we have been away from home, in order to rest and keep away from our many duties, and I am glad to say that I am regaining my strength daily. We intend to leave for the South of France about the middle of December, and on our way home in Spring we much hope to visit Budapest and see all our friends there.

I understand from your letter you have a son in London, and I do hope on our return we may have the pleasure of seeing him there.

Do write to me soon again, and please give my best greetings to all our mutual friends in Budapest. My wife joins me in our kindest regards to you both.

Ever your affectionate friend,
